Board approves new provost, accepts proposed faculty senate with revisions

In addition to approving Dr. Catherine Ingold as the new provost, Gallaudet's Board of Trustees at its March meeting accepted the concept of the proposed faculty senate. Gallaudet President Jerry C. Lee made the announcement about Ingold, who assumed her new duties on the Monday following the board meeting (March 24).

At the meeting of the full board on March 20, Alex Patterson, co-chair of the Committee on Mission, explained that the board required only minor revisions to the bylaws for the faculty senate, and that the board accepted the senate concept and the bylaws with the proviso that the changes be incorporated and submitted to the board at the May meeting for final review.

Dr. Marshall Wick, collegiate faculty representative to the board, thanked Dr. Lee and the board, on behalf of the faculty, for their consideration and assistance in expediting the process through which the senate is being established. Alluding to the anticipated change in Gallaudet's status as well as to the change that the faculty senate will make, Wick said, "Soon we will have reason to be proud of being university professors!" More details on the faculty senate and the required revisions will be provided in On the Green as they are made known.

The board reviewed an Equal Employment Opportunity Report for Gallaudet submitted by LaVarne Hines, director of Administrative and Community Services. According to the report, 27 percent of College, 34 percent of Pre-College faculty and 20 percent of all staff campus-wide are hearing impaired. Eighty-eight percent of all hearing impaired staff are employed in administrative, professional or para-professional

Goodstein receives $553,000 NSF grant

Dr. Harvey Goodstein, a professor in the Department of Mathematics and Computer Science, received word during spring break that he is the recipient of a $553,000 grant from the National Science Foundation for his project entitled "Summer Institute in Mathematics and Computer Science for Pre-College Teachers of the Hearing Impaired."

According to Stanley Matelski, director of Gallaudet's Office of Sponsored Programs, the award is "one of the most significant recent awards on campus."

The grant will provide $327,880 over two years, plus continuation funding of $225,115. The monies will be used to sponsor an institute to provide training in mathematics and computer literacy for 30 participants each summer from 1986 to 1988. Participants—elementary and secondary teachers—will be selected by a screening committee.

College's top academic rank goes to Dr. Catherine Ingold

As Gallaudet's new provost, Catherine W. Ingold holds the highest academic rank of any woman in the 122-year history of the College.

President Jerry C. Lee, announcing the selection of Dr. Ingold on March 20, praised her "breadth of vision and academic leadership."

Dr. Ingold moved to her new position March 24 from her role as dean of the College of Arts and Sciences (CAS).

As the College's chief academic officer, Dr. Ingold will provide overall leadership and direction to the division of Academic Affairs, which includes CAS, the School of Education and Human Services, School of Communication, College of Continuing Education, School of Preparatory Studies, Student Affairs, Graduate Studies and Research, the Library, and Enrollment Management.

Among her priorities as provost, Dr. Ingold said, are continuing the initiative of working more closely with vocational rehabilitation counselors on student program planning; moving toward better coordination of services that support academic achievement; and fitting together students' abilities and the curriculum.

"Certainly my first priority has to be becoming thoroughly conversant with areas in my purview that I have not worked intensively with before," said Dr. Ingold. Among these are graduate programs, Student Affairs, outreach activities and the College's regional centers," she said. "With this 'homework' done, I'll be in a better position to set other priorities."

Dr. Ingold stated that it would be premature to plan any extensive changes at this time. "It would not be

Parade Magazine article on deafness unleashes critical response on campus

"An unfortunate combination of sensationalism and profound ignorance" is how history professor John Van Cleve described an article in the March 9, 1986 edition of Parade Magazine.

Entitled "Saved from a Silent World" and written by Earl Ubell, the article met with a variety of critical responses from members of the Gallaudet community. Ubell is the health editor of Parade, which has a weekly circulation of 25 million.

"Even before the title, a sentence falsely announces 'Computers, implants, teaching methods help thousands hear,'" said Dr. Van Cleve. "Neither computers nor teaching methods can improve hearing, although they can assist in communication."

The article prompted training specialist Susan Newberger of the National Academy to write to Ubell in response to statements in the article such as: "Without hearing, you cannot easily learn language, the essence of humanity. And without language, you lack the ability fully to express thoughts, needs and feelings."

Newberger asked Ubell if he thinks spoken language is the only road to humanity. "The millions of people who use and love American Sign Language will be surprised to know that they are a subhuman species."

"Deaf people are more than a pair of ears that don't function," wrote Newberger. "Your clinical approach does not address the issues of self-acceptance and pride that many deaf people feel . . . (it) left innocent readers with the false impression that all deaf people want to be as much like hearing people as possible."

Newberger also noted Ubell's linguistic paternalism: the use of

Rise from faculty member to provost marks 'an underlying sense of purpose'

"I've gotten some ribbing about not being able to hold a job for very long," laughed Catherine Ingold, referring to her meteoric rise from chair of the Department of Foreign Languages to provost within a 12-month period.

Since her arrival at Gallaudet in 1973 as a faculty member of the Department of Foreign Languages, Dr. Ingold has served the College in many capacities. In 1980, she became director of the Honors Program and in 1983 became chair of the Collegiate Faculty. She became dean of the College of Arts and Sciences in 1985.

Dr. Ingold earned her PhD in French and master's degree in romance linguistics from the University of Virginia. She holds a bachelor's degree from Hollins College where she graduated Phi Beta Kappa. Dr. Ingold also earned a Diplome d'etudes francaises from the University of Paris, where she majored in French.

Her husband, Tom, to whom she has been married for 15 years, is an accountant at Alexandria Hospital. They have one son, age 7.

Dr. Ingold had one deaf relative (her father's double-cousin, whom she describes as "more like an aunt") who did not sign. "Although she held a responsible position and was successful in her career, I often thought of her as lonely, and wondered how different her life might have been if she had had a real community beyond her family," said Dr. Ingold.

Dr. Ingold's initial contact with Gallaudet was by chance. "My husband took a job in the area specifically so I could finish my comps and dissertation at the University of Virginia," she said. After finishing her course work, she applied to colleges in the Washington area for a teaching position.

When she received a reply from Gallaudet outlining its special nature, Dr. Ingold said she went to the library, read everything available on deafness and taught herself fingerspelling. "As soon as I had the opportunity to sit in on a class, I knew this was where I wanted to be—and the idea that I would be paid to learn sign language was my idea of heaven," she smiled.

"I've really never wanted to be anywhere else since I settled here; there have always been opportunities for creativity and growth. I suppose one of the things that struck me initially about teaching at Gallaudet—and that I still feel very strongly about—is that we do something that not every college teacher can do: We meet a special need, and our efforts have an underlying sense of purpose that not every college can claim.

"Gallaudet will continue to play an important role in the lives of hearing impaired people nationally and worldwide. I wouldn't miss being a part of it for anything."

appropriate or productive to make major changes without thorough study and consultation with those involved," she said.

"At present there are important external changes to which we must be responsive," Dr. Ingold continued. "The whole area of teacher training, under intense study now, will inevitably affect our graduate programs in particular.

"The demographic shift to an older population has tremendous implications for all institutions of higher education.

Although it puts pressure on our undergraduate enrollment, this shift offers us some exciting opportunities to serve older populations of deaf persons and persons who lose their hearing in later life.

"In general, we need to look ahead and find opportunities to serve deaf people—as students and in other ways—rather than waiting for things to happen to us," she said.

Professor I. King Jordan of the Psychology Department is serving as interim dean of the College of Arts and Sciences until a new dean is selected.

Campus community responds to Ubell article in Parade

overblown phrases such as "saved," "desperate tragedy," "suffering" and "afflicted."

Dr. Van Cleve pointed out that the first paragraph wrongly states that language cannot be learned easily without hearing. "Yet," he said, "deaf children of deaf parents learn signed languages as quickly and as well as hearing children learn spoken languages."

Mervin Garretson, special assistant to the president, agreed, saying that "total deafness does not necessarily preclude learning English, French, Swedish or any other language.

"The article reflects an abysmal lack of knowledge and information about deafness, deaf people and the deaf community, which enjoys a healthy and happy co-existence with the hearing mainstream," said Garretson.

James Pickett, professor and director of Sensory Communication Research, reacted to Ubell's description of state-of-the-art cochlear implants. "The statement that 22-channel cochlear implant users 'recognize speech . . . learn to modulate their own voices and can hear environmental sounds' is okay," said Dr. Pickett. "However, the statements about children with one-channel implants is grossly over-sanguine," he said. "Children would probably respond better with the 22-channel implant, but there is much research to do before this implant can be used for children."

Dr. Pickett also remarked on Ubell's claim that the one-channel cochlear implant enhanced lipreading ability. "The degree of enhancement of lipreading ability is highly unpredictable," said Dr. Pickett. "Most adult implantees reported a minimal enhancement. However, all implantees reported satisfaction with being able to sense the environment by sound," he said.

Dr. Pickett added that, in technological matters, the article was not as misleading as some he has seen.

Assistant professor Harriet Kaplan, Department of Audiology, responded to a quote in the article from the New York League for the Hard of Hearing. The quote described a 90 percent success rate in teaching speech to children with severe hearing loss to speak clearly, concluding with the statement that the children "understand everything you say."

"Although the league does an excellent job, I think this is overstated," Dr. Kaplan said. "I suspect," she said, "that the children referred to have a considerable amount of residual hearing, which is not as extremely distorted as claimed in the article. However, they do require good early intervention, which the league provides.

"Ubell equates a total communication approach to education with low reading levels," said Dr. Kaplan, "when, in fact, the use of sign language does not retard academic achievement," she said.

Dr. Van Cleve noted that Ubell's use of Stephen Weitz (an acoustical engineer who has had severe hearing loss since birth) as a model of a deaf person who is 'saved from a silent world' is ironic. "Weitz is married to another deaf person (one with incomprehensible speech) and has deaf friends who only communicate in sign language," he said.

"If Weitz is 'saved' from the world of deaf people, one wonders, why does he return to it for his spouse and friends?" observed Dr. Van Cleve.

"What Ubell said oversimplifies matters and lacks balance," said Donna Chitwood, director of Public Relations. "He implies that technology is the answer and 'we've almost got it.'

"Of course, Ubell did not write that offensive headline, 'Saved from a Silent World,' " said Chitwood, "but he did say that profoundly deaf people are 'bottled up in silence.' I think he would be in for many surprises at Gallaudet!"

Chitwood added that she was really disappointed in Ubell's article, "especially considering how much information he received from our research division and from interviews with other people at Gallaudet."

KDES students take high honors in contest

Nine KDES students won top prizes in last month's International Creative Arts Festival sponsored by the Center on Deafness in Des Plaines, Ill.

The festival, marking its 10th anniversary and its first year as an international competition, is open to hearing impaired children from elementary school (age 6) through college, and includes three regional competitions.

Students competed in three categories—art, writing and talent. Regional judging took place in February, and regional winners then competed in the international contest. International winners receive a trip to Chicago this month to receive cash awards and ribbons at a special banquet.

Winners from KDES are: Arthur Prather, Raylene Harris, Raychelle Harris, Nora Yates, Margie English, Myra Yanke, Dorian Yanke, Roberta Mather and Marie Shook. Terry Giansanti was a second place winner, and Darian Burwell and Issatue Bangura received honorable mention.

According to the Center on Deafness, KDES tied with the Western Pennsylvania School for the Deaf for the most international winners.

positions. More women than men are employed at Gallaudet both as full-time staff members (57.28 percent) and as College and Pre-College faculty (52.94 percent). Blacks are the leading minority among full-time staff (36.08 percent) and second to hearing impaired people, or the leading minority by race, among faculty (6.42 percent).

The board also revised the tuition surcharge for foreign students. Effective as of the fall semester of 1986, foreign students attending college at Gallaudet will be charged only 20 percent above the prevailing tuition rate for U.S. citizens instead of the previous 50 percent surcharge.

In other business, the board re-elected members whose terms expire this year and re-elected its slate of officers, with Jane Bassett Spilman continuing as board chair, James J. Hicks as vice chair, Frank B. Sullivan as secretary and Dr. Philip M. Sprinkle as treasurer. Judge Thomas Jackson was elected to serve as the fifth and at-large member of the Executive Committee of the Board.

The board also revised its schedule to meet three instead of four times a year, in October, February and May. The Executive Committee will meet at other times as necessary. The board restructured its committees to include Resources, Academic Affairs and Student and Alumni Affairs. Previously, the three standing committees were Resources, Mission and Trustees. A formal vote on the required change in the bylaws will be taken in May.

Spilman presented an account of the trip which she and Dr. Lee made to California in mid-March. They met with prospective board candidates, attended the national conference of the Association of Governing Boards, toured the John Tracy Clinic in Los Angeles and talked with its director, met with the producer of the film "Children of a Lesser God" and visited with Gallaudet donors. Dr. Lee also met with the state vocational rehabilitation director and was interviewed by the media.

Spilman reported receiving a warm reception and unsolicited praise for Gallaudet while in California. "Without exception people talked in the highest terms about Gallaudet and about their experience working with your president and all of you at Gallaudet," Spilman told the board.

She concluded the business of the board by surprising Lee with a certificate thanking him for his 15 years of service to Gallaudet.
